

VR vs AR in Education - Joanna MacDougall

overview

This is an interactive presentation that I found in OER Commons through a search using Mason OER Metafinder \(MOM\) Results \(deepwebaccess.com\). I plan to use it in a workshop for my colleagues introducing virtual reality in education to them. I want to provide them with some additional resources to extend their learning and I particularly like this because it is more interactive than just reading an article or a textbook. So depending on the level of background knowledge each individual has they can choose how in depth to go.

I plan to provide my learners with list of resources for them to take away and use after the workshop to refresh, review and consolidate their learning. I think I may actually use a Padlet and post all of my resources in the Padlet so they can easily access any of the resources and then open it up for them to add any additional resources they might find and want to share as well.

This resource passes the CRAAP test and I would potentially use it in an Anatomy course (although I would have to review it more comprehensively beside the current text to check for sure.

Carrie - I have adopted this textbook in my Anatomy course with OTA/PTA students. I think it's great. You can adapt and modify it as you need to as well. I love that I can post links to individual chapters for different topics/modules - another curate specifically to my own course!

Work Life Balance Infographic

This visual aid is meant to aid Occupational Health & Safety students in their understanding of Work Life Balance. It is a great summary of the topic on one page. <https://www.ccohs.ca/products/posters/work-life-balance/>

This a nice resource to share with students on the topic and it is also a nice example of an effective infographic. Could use it as an example when assigning an infographic as an assignment (for any topic) too.
